Dear Mr. Feldman:

America is facing a housing crisis with skyrocketing costs and a severe shortage of affordable housing supply. Wall Street and giant corporate landlords are making the crisis worse by gobbling up homes and apartment complexes, jacking up housing costs across the country, and using aggressive and discriminatory tactics to push up profits at the expense of families. New polling shows that 64% of Americans support reining in corporate landlords and institutional investors to lower housing costs—and 73% support banning corporate investors from single-family homes.¹ Earlier this month, the Senate overwhelmingly passed the bipartisan 21st Century ROAD to Housing Act, which takes a first step to ban large institutional investors from buying single-family homes.² The House of Representatives should pass this legislation, and President Trump should sign it into law, as expeditiously as possible.

Congress also has a responsibility to take meaningful steps to address cost hikes and abusive practices by giant corporate landlords in multifamily and manufactured housing. Therefore, I write to request information regarding Progress Residential's investments in the housing sector, including investments in multifamily homes and manufactured housing communities.

Since the 2008 foreclosure crisis, institutional investors have bought up huge portfolios of single-family rental housing.³ Institutional investors have a competitive advantage in the housing market due to their access to capital, federal tax benefits, and technology. This scaled access to resources allows investors to take hundreds or thousands of single-family homes off the market in a short time, often through all-cash purchases at above-market rates that outbid individual homebuyers.⁴ According to the Government Accountability Office, 32 institutional investors collectively owned 450,000 single-family homes as of June 2022 – roughly 3 percent of the national market for single-family homes – and the five largest investors owned nearly 300,000 homes.⁵ In fact, homebuilders are increasingly shifting their focus away from building for-sale homes for individual families and instead building for corporate landlords to rent entire communities.⁶ Allowing private equity firms and other large institutional investors to snatch up thousands of homes can make it impossible for individuals and families to buy their own home – which is why the Senate-passed 21st Century ROAD to Housing Act includes restrictions on large institutional investors’ ownership of single-family housing units. .

But large institutional investors also play a major role in the multifamily and manufactured housing markets. Institutional investors have acquired a ten percent share of the multifamily market, which is approximately 2.2 million housing units.⁷ And private equity firms own the majority of America’s manufactured housing communities, making private equity the biggest landlord of mobile homes in America.⁸ Between 2019 and 2021, institutional investors accounted for 23 percent of manufactured housing community purchases, up from 13 percent in the prior two-year period.⁹ Among communities owned by institutional investors nationwide, just 23 private equity firms own over 1,900 manufactured housing parks with over 400,000 lots.¹⁰

Institutional investor ownership of manufactured housing has resulted in increased costs and rents. Lot rents in manufactured housing communities have increased by 45% over the last decade.¹¹ In Massachusetts, for example, the State Attorney General is suing an investor owner of a manufactured housing community for “unfair and retaliatory [lot] rent increases” of over 77% since 2022, with a cumulative 133% hike in new lease lot rents.¹² Abusive practices by institutional investors in multifamily housing have also driven up costs for some renters. Some of the largest owners of multifamily housing have been the subject of federal anti-competition lawsuits against their use of price-fixing algorithms that allow them to artificially inflate rent prices.¹³

Moreover, institutional investors often shirk on tenant protections and maintenance costs to boost their profits across the single-family, multifamily, and manufactured housing sectors. Major investors like Tricon Residential (now owned by Blackstone), Amherst, and Progress Residential have all been subject to major litigation for alleged fair housing violations, habitability deficiencies, and violations of basic property management standards.¹⁴ In September 2024, the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) sued Invitation Homes for allegedly deceiving applicants “about lease costs, charging renters undisclosed fees, failing to inspect homes before residents moved in, and unfairly withholding tenants’ security deposits when they moved out.”¹⁵ The FTC settled with Invitation Homes in 2024, returning over $47 million in restitution to more than 444,000 affected renters.¹⁶ Tenants have also frequently reported that private equity and Wall Street landlords pursue evictions at a higher rate across single family, multifamily, and manufactured housing,¹⁷ including during the federal eviction moratorium during the pandemic.¹⁸ The Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond found “that renters might be exposed to greater housing security and well-being risks with corporate investor landlords,” and corporate investors with more than 15 single-family rental properties “were more likely to file eviction notices.”¹⁹ Renters living in private equity-owned multifamily buildings have also reported problems, such as “large rent increases, hidden fees, poor maintenance and repairs, lack of responsiveness to tenant

The Senate has taken an important first step to address the role of private equity and other large institutional investors in single-family housing, but there is still more to be done to lower housing costs and tackle predatory practices by large institutional investors in the housing sector. To help me better understand Progress Residential’s role in the housing sector, as well as to better understand what role, if any, Progress Residential has played or will play in the development and implementation of any ban on large institutional investors in single-family housing, we request answers to the following questions, disaggregated by zip code, no later than April 8, 2026:

1. Provide an overview of all housing currently owned by Progress Residential and any subsidiary or affiliate of Progress Residential:
 - a. How many single-family housing units does Progress Residential own? Where are these units located? When and from whom did Progress Residential purchase the units?
 - i. Please disaggregate single-family units that were purpose built, or built-to-rent, and whether units are on platted lots, condominiumized, on a single planned unit development (PUD), or some other land use structure.
